

Revolutionary Grains Internship Position

We are Revolutionary Grains, a food justice and arts non-profit that is moving beyond GMO corn, hybridized wheat, white rice, and erased stories. We are weaving an alternative grain supply chain and amplifying the diverse voices of those who traditionally and ethically produce grain products, yet whose voices are often left out of the market narrative. To learn more about our mission, projects and values, visit our website at <https://www.revolutionarygrains.org/>.

We are looking for an intern to work with us on multiple projects through the winter term, including GIS story mapping, communications and policy research. As such, we have designed the role described below – but are also open to working with individual students to design an internship suited to their interests.

This internship focuses on communications roles in the nonprofit industry. Projects in this role would include social media management, professional writing, brand identity and data visualization. The student would have the opportunity to pair research with narrative through creative media of their choice – such as graphic design, handmade art, writing etc. This work will be valuable for creating strong grant applications, social media content and fundraising opportunities for the organization. This position is perfect for a student interested in creative research presentation and communications.

This is a primarily remote position, with occasional in person meetings with your mentors, which will take place around downtown Seattle. We are flexible about hours, with a minimum of 30hrs over the quarter. If students are interested in completing more than one credit, we are open to that option as well!

In order to apply for this position, please email us before December 16th, at revolutionarygrains@gmail.com. Include the following in your email:

- Your preferred name and pronouns, and any additional experience you'd want to explore in a start-up food-justice non profit
- A copy of your resume
- One other piece of work describing how you relate to RG's mission and values. This can be a cover letter, a drawing, a short video – or anything else that demonstrates your skills, passions, and values as an advocate for environmental justice and storytelling.
- Once we review the applications, we will be reaching out to candidates to schedule a short 45 minute interview with our Executive Director, Simren Rai, and our Director of Operations, Fatema Boxwala.