

Academic Warning, Probation, Suspension, and Reinstatement Policy for Undergraduate Students

A Seattle University undergraduate student must maintain a cumulative and major GPA of at least 2.00 to remain in good academic standing. In addition, College of Nursing undergraduate students must complete successfully each course required in the major with a C (2.0) or better.

Any undergraduate student who does not meet the standards listed above for their respective major and school or college will receive one of the following:

Academic Warning

In the first term that a student does not meet the Academic Standards for their school/college and/or major, that student will receive an Academic Warning from their school/college. An Academic Warning will communicate concern about a student's academic performance and serve as a formal reminder of available support and the Academic Standards of the student's school/college and/or major. (Major GPA assessment begins after a student earns 15 credits in their major.)

Academic Probation

In subsequent terms (consecutive or non-consecutive), a student who does not meet the Academic Standards may be placed on Academic Probation or again on Academic Warning by their school/college. In order to recover their academic standing, students must meet the academic conditions listed as part of their initial placement on Academic Warning.

Academic Suspension

A student who has been placed on Academic Probation and, in a subsequent term (consecutive or non-consecutive), does not meet the Academic Standards may be placed on Academic Suspension by their school/college. A student placed on Academic Suspension will be dropped from next term's classes following an unsuccessful appeal for Academic Reinstatement.

In order to recover their academic standing and re-enroll in courses at SU, students must follow the Academic Reinstatement procedure outlined in the formal notification from the school/college.

Academic Reinstatement

A student may appeal their Academic Suspension and apply for Academic Reinstatement, permitting them to reenroll in their original program or to seek to continue in a different academic program and/or school/college at Seattle University. There are multiple ways a student may be reinstated—all outlined in the formal notification a student will receive from their school/college upon being placed on academic suspension. A student who has been reinstated will recover their academic standing when they meet the minimum academic standards for their school/college and/or major.
